			Abstract Scientific Paper: DAS, An Intelligent Solution for Industry 4.0		In the interest of serving the Philippine industries, ADMATEL of DOST-ITDI is determined in finding more effective and much faster means of solving issues in the industries through L&T. In pillar R&D, in partnership with DOST-ITDI, the Intelligent Data Analysis System (IDAS) became a very effective tool to conduct multivariate analyses on material fingerprints and to produce kinetic stability models. IDAS is a web-based software that was developed to provide a rapid and innovative profiling technique that reveals the history of materials and substrates, processes they possibly underwent, and the probability of causing them their current chemical state or properties. This provides more information on reactions, production methods, and sources of materials, hence interrelations among samples were previously revealed. IDAS enhanced flexibility and robustness was made very useful both for scientific and non-scientific material datasets. Several performance testing procedures were applied to ensure the validity of results produced by the system. IDAS Software V1.0 was also made ready to serve industrial needs as its innovative design strengthens failure and defect analyses of materials, as well as advanced characterization and profiling of substances in the perspectives of quality assurance and quality control. Keywords: Big data analytics; artificial intelligence; materials informatics; failure analysis; materials profiling; materials characterization
ITDI_00555	Website	Article		ADMATEL, DAS, intelligent data analysis, Industry 4.0, scientific paper, Negos City	Abstract: Static Time-of-Flight Secondary-Ion Mass Spectrometry (TOF-SIMS) is a highly sensitive surface analysis technique commonly used to identify materials or substances on surfaces and to quantify further these sought components. Quantification is usually achieved through measuring relative peak intensities and by comparing these with appropriate peaks from reference materials. Repeatability and intermediate precision are important for these measurements in order to determine if there are significant variations in the analyses. In this study, two important metrological contributions to the uncertainty of static SIMS intensity measurements were assessed: (a) the repeatability; and (b) the intermediate precision of positive-ion relative-intensity measurements. With negative ions, the control of the surface potential for insulators is not yet sufficiently good for high repeatability. Validation was done using C₂D₂O₂ (2000000017) and poly (tetrafluoroethylene) (PTFE) tape as reference material. Emission current of 50 nA was maintained at 0.001 nA, with pulsed target current measurements between 0.0001 nA to 1.000 nA. Parameter conditions applied were: (i) 100-1000 water view (m/z); (ii) random mode; (iii) 120-120 water view (m/z); and (iv) 1-100.0 dose density (ions/cm²), in order to achieve static mode. The analysis was also assisted with an electron flood gun for charge compensation. Calculated SIMS relative-intensity repeatability were 1.831%, 1.454%, 1.830%, and 0.227%, for each of the participants, signifying that the method passed the 3% repeatability limit and is fit for purpose. Interlaboratory comparison showed that intermediate precision is also within the acceptable range both for the lighter ionic masses (ALR2 values within 120) and the heavier ionic masses (ALR2 values within 120).
